Infectious Consent Form

Canine Influenza is a relatively new disease. All dogs are susceptible to infection, and no dogs are immune. Canine Influenza is an air born disease but can also be spread if a dog is around a contaminated surface. Signs include: a cough that can last over a week, low grade fever, nasal discharge, and lack of energy as well as loss of appetite. Symptoms can progressively get worse and include: pneumonia, high fever and in serious case even death. Here at Grand Montecito Animal Hospital we highly recommend vaccinating your pet against Canine Influenza.

Due to the increasing population in the Las Vegas area, we are finding an increased number of pets with internal parasites. Certain parasites can be infectious to both animals and humans and are often without any clinical symptoms. If your pet has a parasite, a simple fecal test can help determine the exact type of parasite present and establish a potential animal and human risk. We at Grand Montecito Animal Hospital recommend semi-annual fecal testing and monthly administration of an internal parasite preventative. If the fecal test is positive, additional medication or repeat de-worming may be necessary.
